

COMMERCIAL ANALYSIS SCHEDULE OF FEES

Effective: May 1, 2018

Earnings Credit: 0.25%

Account Disclosure

Provident's Commercial Analysis checking is for businesses that frequently use a variety of our bank services. With this account, we measure the services you use against your Earnings Credit based on the balances you keep in your account. We charge you for those services that are not offset by the Earnings Credit.

Accounts used as part of the Commercial Analysis process must be set up in a group. Group accounts will be linked at our sole discretion. An account can only be part of one group.

We assess a monthly maintenance charge to which we add fees for services you use. Please refer to Provident Bank's Schedule of Fees for frequently used services. The designated service charge account will be assessed the difference if the analysis determines that the Earnings Credit is not sufficient to cover the charges. Certain fees may be charged at the time of the transaction against the account on which it occurred.

Earnings Credit provides an opportunity for you to offset your monthly service charge and most service fees by maintaining sufficient balances on deposit. Provident Bank reserves the right to pay a higher rate. The total amount of Earnings Credit will be figured by multiplying the Earnings Credit rate by your average collected monthly balance. If the Earnings Credit is greater than the amount of fees assessed, your service charge will be zero (0). Any remaining Earnings Credit will not carry over to the next month.

Provident Bank reserves the right to determine, at our discretion, whether an account will be eligible for Commercial Analysis and to discontinue the Commercial Analysis service with or without cause or notice except as required by law. We may change this agreement at any time. For example: we may add, delete or amend terms, conditions, and other provisions. Account requires minimum of $500 to open. Additional fees may apply.
